The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negatived by the manner in which the invention was made.

Claims 5-14 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Kawabuchi et al in view of Richter et al and Satoh.

Kawabuchi et al disclose photopolymerizable urethane (meth)acrylate compositions used for forming gaskets for disk drive units. These compositions are taught as produced from isocyanate oligomers produced from polyethers, polyesters and polyether/esters (see column 5, lines 28-33). Suitable catalysts for reaction include triethylamine (column 6, line 25). This reference fails to explicitly teach a preference for the amine catalyst or the use of these compositions for the specific applications of instant claims 10-13.

The reference to Richter et al teaches disadvantages of the use of tin compounds for catalysis involving isocyanates (column 1, lines 39-58) which can be avoided by using amines.

Therefore, it would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art to select the amines of the primary reference as catalysts when the disadvantages of the tin compounds were to be avoided.

The reference to Satoh teaches the application of urethane (meth)acrylates as adhesive for bonding a magnetic head of a hard drive unit to its support arm (abstract and claims).

Application/Control Number: 10/032,448

Art Unit: 1714

Therefore it would have been obvious to use the compositions of the primary reference as the adhesive in the reference to Satoh.

The combined teachings of Kawabuchi et al and Satoh are seen as rendering obvious the use of urethane (meth)acrylates in each of the specific applications claimed instantly since these compositions are taught, for example, as able to avoid contamination of the hard drive internals (Kawabuchi et al, abstract).
